Older adults in vulnerable communities: Health and quality of life over time

This longitudinal research will identify risk and protective mechanisms impacting the health and quality of life of LGBT older adults, which will directly contribute to the development of tailored interventions to improve the health of demographically diverse older adults and subsequently reduce health care costs.

Role: Co-Investigator, Project Director

NIH/NIA 1R01AG055488-01A1 (Fredriksen Goldsen & Teri, MPI) $3,696,148 9/15/2017 – 5/31/2022

Older Adults Living with Alzheimer's Disease and their Caregivers: Testing an Evidence-Based Intervention for Underserved Populations

This randomized controlled trial study tests the translation and enhancement of the first community evidence-based dyadic caregiving intervention, Reducing Disabilities in Alzheimer's Disease, for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender older adults living with AD/RD to improve quality of life and delay institutionalization.

Role: Co-Investigator

NIH/NIA NW Roybal Center Pilots 5P30AG034592 (Kim, Fredriksen Goldsen & Teri, MPI) $192,241 9/1/2018 – 12/31/2020

Socially Isolated Older Adults Living with Dementia

The goal of the proposed research is to design and pilot test a developmental study of the cultural appropriateness, acceptability, and feasibility of an innovative translation of a personalized care network to support those living with dementia without a family caregiver, directly addressing unique LGBT-specific risk factors.

Older adult health and kin networks in underserved communities

This study combines the Convoy Model of Social Relations and the Health Equity Promotion Model, and uses both self-report and biological measures, to investigate the relationships between kin relations, environmental factors, life events, health-promoting and adverse factors (e.g. health behaviors, psychological factors, social integration), and cognitive, mental, functional and physical health of demographically diverse LGBT older adults.

Role: Multiple Principal Investigator

Applications Under Development

NIH/NIA (Kim, PI)

Social Isolation, Risk for Alzheimer's Disease and Related Dementias, and Resilience among People with Multiple Minority Social Positions

The incidence of mild cognitive impairment (MCI) and AD is higher among many racial/ethnic minorities and sexual and gender minorities (SGM), but rates among those with multiple minority social positions, who often are at heightened risks of health disparities, are rarely known. This study will examine the role of social isolation (structure, function, and quality) in explaining disparities in cognitive impairment and progress to ADRD by race/ethnicity and sexual orientation and gender identity.

Role: Principal Investigator

Completed Funding

UW Population Health Initiative's Pilot Research Grant (Freriksen Goldsen, PI) 5/1/2018 – 4/30/2019
